

James Armijo

A true "Wyomingite", Mr. Armijo was born and graduated from High School and College in the small town of Laramie, Wyoming. While running track for a year at the University of Wyoming, he explored several educational fields including special education and substitute teaching, but eventually found a niche in coaching and athletics. This passion subsequently brought him to River Valley High School where he taught physical education and coached football, baseball and golf for ten years. During that time, he obtained a Masters Degree in Educational Leadership from the University of Northern Arizona and found his way to The Mighty T-Birds of Mohave High School where he has been the Assistant Principal for eight years.

His wife is a Principal of Mohave Valley Elementary School where both of his wonderful daughters attend. His family enjoys spending time in the mountains, riding four-wheelers and going to sporting events and dance competitions.
